Q1 C	Q2 C	Q3 C	Q4 B

Q1. Surangam, a traditional underground water-harvesting system that eight grama panchayats are preparing to restore, is found mainly in which district of Kerala?

Answer C. Kasaragod

Surangams are narrow horizontal tunnels cut into laterite hills, mainly in Kasaragod district. They catch groundwater seeping through the rock and let it flow out by gravity, with no pumps or electricity. Monsoon rain recharges the laterite, and that stored water feeds the tunnels through the dry summer. A similar system in Dakshina Kannada (Karnataka) is called thurangam or suranga.

Q2. Which traditional water-harvesting system of India is associated with Ladakh?

Answer C. Zing

Zings are small tanks in Ladakh that collect glacial meltwater through channels. Among other traditional systems, johad and khadin belong to Rajasthan, kuhl to Himachal Pradesh, ahar-pyne to Bihar and eri to Tamil Nadu. Such systems came up in the news alongside the revival of Kerala's surangams.

Q3. Apart from the whole of India, NavIC provides position, navigation and timing services up to what distance beyond India's borders?

Answer C. 1,500 km

NavIC covers India and a region up to 1,500 km around it. The full system uses seven satellites, three geostationary and four geosynchronous. India began building its own system after being denied GPS data during the 1999 Kargil war.

Q4. A glacial lake outburst flood (GLOF) in Bhutan recently affected the Sankosh river. By what name is the Sankosh known in Bhutan?

Answer B. Puna Tsang Chhu

The GLOF at Shintaphu Lake in northwestern Bhutan sent flash floods down the Mo Chhu and Sankosh systems, prompting warnings by the Central Water Commission for parts of West Bengal and Assam. The Sankosh, called Puna Tsang Chhu in Bhutan, joins the Brahmaputra in Assam. A GLOF happens when a moraine, ice or rock barrier holding a glacial lake gives way.
